If Hungary doesn't revolt, then the anti-Roosevelts will be sorry.

President Taft was extremely tender with the woman's suffragists in response to their submissive letter, artfully worded.

We notice that Montpelier is after a "safe and sane youth." When they capture it, Barre will go down and look the species over and then judge if it is worth while to curb the celebration of the greatest national holiday.

The death of Miss Helen Wilson from football injuries sustained six months ago will have no effect now, because it was forecasted in the list of those accidents whose call was heard by football experts.

THE LOSS IN HYDE PARK.

Severe as was the blow to Hyde Park through yesterday's disastrous fire, the burden is nevertheless lightened by the scattering of the loss through public ownership of much of the burned property. Included in the property destroyed were the county courthouse and the county jail, which the entire taxpaying population of Lamoille county will be called on to replace. Another building was the town hall, which the taxpayers of the town will be called upon to rebuild. Then, again, another item of heavy loss was the Congregational church structure, and the loss of this falls not upon individuals, but upon a collection of individuals. Of course, there were many private losses, and in part of those the burden will be heavy. But probably a quarter, at least, of the loss was sustained by collections of individuals, and the diffusion of the burden will thus reduce its force. It will mean an added county tax to rebuild the courthouse and the jail; a slight increase in the town tax to replace the town hall, and a co-operation of members and friends to put up a church building.

Therefore, large as the fire was and distressing to many, it was far less severe than might have been, had the same loss fallen more upon individuals. Moreover, Hyde Park is an energetic, bustling community and should be able to recover from the shock of the catastrophe much better than many another Vermont town. Amidst the gloom which pervades the place, there will come shortly the light of hope and expectancy for complete rebuilding and a resumption of the regular activities.

Bishop Rice.

Vermonters in general, without regard to religious affiliations, will extend a hearty welcome to Bishop Rice, who has been consecrated to reside over the diocese of Burlington, and will wish him long years of honored usefulness in his sacred calling. Vermonters have the most gratifying assurance of the many excellencies of the man who has come to make his home among them, both in his record as it has been unfolded to them, in the commendation of his contemporaries, and in the signal dignity and responsibility now conferred upon him by the help of his people. He, in turn, will find that the people of this state, as a class, are impatient of all forms of religious bigotry and intolerance, that denominational lines are not permitted to interfere with the ordering of social and political affairs here, and that an already broad and an always healthfully growing spirit of liberal fellowship prevails for the most part among Green Mountain men.—St. Albans Messenger.

Taft Speaks in Meeting.

The number of occasions on which the president has delivered a message not exactly to the liking of his audience, as in his latest address before the women suffragists in Washington, shows him possessed of more courage than diplomacy. His great predecessor, with whom he is now generally compared, had on his list of topics an extraordinary number of platitudinous things, like race suicide and follies of the idle rich, which in the main did not provoke much controversy anywhere. On many a delicate occasion he argued earnestly for the undisputed thing. But Mr. Taft has an exceptionally long record of expressing dissent from the position of his hosts and entertainers.

Long before he became president he went out to Oklahoma to tell its people that the new constitution was so bad that it should be emphatically rejected. At the banquet given by the Washington business men who sought to have the District of Columbia allowed a delegate on the floor of the House, like the territories, the president heard their story and promptly told them there was nothing in it. Down in New Mexico he was introduced to an audience with an account of the agreement for statehood, which had been a condition precedent to his nomination. He immediately denounced that version of the affair as discreditable and wholly unfounded. His Akron speech of years ago, in which he said that were he to be at home on election day he should vote the Democratic local ticket, will never be forgotten by the practical politicians of Ohio. One in the Philippines, the native American element had assembled to air their "grievances," and when they had done so at great length he replied in effect that the steamboat lines were running back to the United States. In the heart of the waterways agitation on his Mississippi river trip, he made no secret of his misgivings over the plan. At Winona, in backing Taft, he virtually affronted the sentiment of the great Middle West. Every time he says a good word for Aldrich or Cannon he is antagonizing the average American audience, yet he keeps up his campaign of education. It shows him a man of definite convictions and willing to say what he believes. And these are commendable qualities.—Boston Transcript.

Vermont's Two Trout Seasons.

Windham county is enjoying the distinction which comes to it from the opening of the season for trout fishing a month earlier than in other counties in the state. In that county, the closed season extends from the fifteenth day of July to the fifteenth day of April, and speckled beauties are now being taken galore in the streams here, judging from reports. Thronging of nimrod's are said to be taking the brooks, and it is predicted that with a few days of warmer weather the trout fishing in Windham county will be ahead of anything enjoyed in years.

In other counties in Vermont, the closed season extends from the fifteenth day of August to the fifteenth day of May, so that in these counties disciples of Isaac Walton must wait until the middle of the coming month before trying their luck.

Considerable diversity of opinion has existed with reference to the period which should be observed as a closed season, and when the taking of trout would least interfere with the propagation of this fish in Vermont streams. The establishing of different closed seasons for different parts of the state in this way will make it possible to institute interesting and profitable comparisons bearing upon the problems in question. In the meantime, the people of Windham county will not object to the fact that they are having their fun while others are forced to either enjoy angling in anticipation or to journey to the county which opens the trout season in the Green Mountain state.—Burlington Free Press.

Jingles and Jest

To the Ticket Stub,
On the Morning After,
You, that were so crisp and clean
Only yesterday,
Now with mutilated mien,
Cloud the morning heaven.

You, that seemed to promise me
Thrills of Thespian magic,
Breathed, through mists of memory,
Truths belated, tragic.

Dreams are but an empty life;
Now in mournful numbers
("Right H 3 and 4") you knife
All my visioned slumbers.

Almost willingly I paid
For your bright possession!
Why, I liked you as a maid
Likes a love confession!

Saw in your prefigured date
First, the play's gay lassies;
Then, beside each pleasant plate,
Cheerful stuff in glasses.

Didn't it come true? Of course;
Even with additions,
Such as headache, blues, remorse,
Breakfast-time contributions.

But my brain this question sings,
When I've shot my rockets;
Why are you the only things
In my punished pockets?

—Chester Firkins in Punch.

FRENCH SOLDIERS.

One of Them Explains Why They Lack Enthusiasm.

Why French soldiers are not overenthusiastic is explained by one of them, who is quoted by a writer in the London Times: "Here am I, at the age of twenty-one, just about the age when a young man in England would be crowning his college career or starting in life, just when he would be becoming a man, in fact, and I am doing nothing. At least, I call it nothing—scrubbing buttons, grooming a horse that doesn't belong to me or riding him nowhere in particular or with no object in particular and passing the day in the canteen and the night in the dormitory with regular brutality, who, after two years of this aimless existence, become murderers out of pure ennui, if they have not committed a murder already, and make the criminal statistics of France the horror of Europe."

"And all this for the sake of a war that never comes and which, when it comes, will be settled in a few weeks and to the disadvantage of France. We have plenty of courage. We don't mind being killed. The French never have minded, but that is not the point. The real art of war is to avoid being killed and to kill the others. And we are destined to be crushed by Germany through sheer force of numbers as soon as she consents to move."

"You see, they have an army of nearly 5,000,000, and their population is so large that they can pick the fittest and strongest of their adult males for military service. They can afford to pick one man out of every two. We have to take every man jack that is not quite a cripple or an imbecile. And most of the rest have no vocation for anything military."

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

"The Climax" Coming to Barre Opera House Soon.

Joseph M. Weber's novelty play "The Climax," by Edward Locke, one of the most substantial successes of recent years, will be seen in this city soon. The beauty of this little play lies in its simplicity, the author gets far away from the conventional idea of cheap sentiment and offers a playlet teeming with real heart interest, bright sparkling comedy and a love element that is interesting enough to appeal to the heart of the most blasé theatre-goer. "The Climax" in point of intensity and heart interest is said to outrival any other play within present range of vision on the American stage. There has been no drama produced in a decade that has received so much favorable comment from the newspaper and magazine writers, and this fact alone is worthy of special mention, as the theatre-going public can receive no better guarantee regarding the merits of this charming play. The piece is a decided novelty in the clever combination of music and dramatic dialogue in such a way that the effect of each depends on the other. It is the effect of a song surrounded by a very interesting story of Bohemian life in America. A most promising young woman singer, to correct a small throat defect, undergoes an operation; a young doctor, who is in love with her, wishes to keep her from a stage career. His suggestions that the operation has been a failure, together with the nervous shock, temporarily deprive the singer of her voice, the discovery that she has regained it, and the knowledge of the young physician's deception provide the incidents of the story. With three of the four characters professional musicians, the play is temperamental to a degree, reflecting the moods and tenors of Bohemian life with marked fidelity.

The Comique announces a special vaudeville feature to-day that should prove a strong drawing-card. The well known vaudeville team, Ward and Barton, have been engaged to give their act, "Wanted, An Actor," at each performance. Mr. Barton is well known for his singing and yodling on the Victor photograph, and is one of the Victor stars. His picture is in the Victor phonograph catalogue of August, 1909. In speaking of Mr. Barton, the Victor company has justly termed him "the prince of yodlers." Dan Roach tells us that this should be one of the hits of the season, as this act comes direct from the foremost vaudeville circuits of America. Along with this are offered three feature pictures. The admission will remain the same, five cents.
